

My name is Anisha Kumari Bhatta, and I am an international student from Nepal. I recently received my student visa to attend the University of Wisconsin Green Bay, where I will pursue an undergraduate degree in Business Administration and Management. Being accepted into UWGB is not only a personal achievement, but a dream come true for both me and my family. It represents a major step toward building a brighter and more secure future.

Coming from Nepal, a country where access to global education is limited for many due to financial constraints, studying in the United States is an extraordinary opportunity but it also comes with a heavy financial challenge. My family is doing everything they can to support my education abroad, but the overall cost of tuition, housing, books, health insurance, and daily living expenses is a significant challenge. As an international student, I am not eligible for U.S. federal financial aid and have limited work opportunities while studying. That's why receiving a scholarship is not only helpful, it is truly essential for me to be able to continue my education smoothly.

I have always been a hardworking and determined student who believes in making the most of every opportunity. I see education as the most powerful tool for growth, not just for individual success, but also for uplifting others. My goal is to gain knowledge and experience through this degree so that I can eventually return to Nepal and contribute to the economic development of my country by supporting businesses and empowering young people, especially women, in leadership and entrepreneurship.

I am fully committed to making the most of my time at UWGB. I plan to immerse myself in academics, participate in leadership, student organizations, and give back to the campus community in any way I can. I value discipline, resilience, and continuous learning, and believe those qualities will help me make a meaningful contribution both inside and outside the classroom.

Receiving a scholarship would significantly reduce the financial pressure on my family and allow me to focus fully on my studies. It would give me peace of mind, the freedom to engage more deeply in campus life and academic success. I am truly grateful for the opportunity to be considered for scholarship support, and I promise to honor that support by giving my absolute best throughout my time at UW-Green Bay.
